ANALYZING FEATURES OF EDX AND COURSERA THAT SUPPORT STUDEN

This research goal is to find which edX and Coursera features that affect and support students learning satisfaction. Benefit from this research for lecturers is to become an additional way to conduct learning activity by using the features recommendation, and as for students in School of Information Systems is to support their learning satisfaction that can increase their participation in Binusmaya, particularly in GSLC (Guided Self Learning Class). The main objective of this research is to find features of Learning Management System (LMS) on Massive Open Online Course (MOOC) based on students learning satisfaction indicators and give feature recommendations for Binusmaya that support School of Information Systems BINUS University students learning. Data collection method for this research is by spreading 130 questionnaires to students who take e-Business streaming. As for the data analysis, the authors use multiple regression model for analyzing the relationship between the dependent and independent variables and using SPSS Statistics 22 software as a tool for analyzing the collected data. The result from this research shows that communication, lecture and study material, quiz, assignment, and grading features are the features that support students learning satisfaction.
